we introduce and review a number of topics drawn from the theories of random processes and random systems in particular we address the following subjects random walks in continuous spaces and on lattices continuum limits of random walks and stable distributions system random haskell

Nov 12 2023

this library deals with the common task of pseudo random number generation the library makes it possible to generate repeatable results by starting with a specified initial random number generator or to get different results on each run by using the system initialised generator or by supplying a seed from some other source the simplest random system consists of values x taken from a distribution $p(x)$ for example in a coin toss x can be heads or tails and $p(\text{heads}) = p(\text{tails}) = 1/2$ in this case x takes on discrete values it is also possible for a random variable to come from a continuous distribution in an ecosystem the interacting variables are species populations or species biomass which cannot take on negative values thus for example the equilibrium population values must be positive random dynamical systems rds form a special class of non autonomous systems the autonomy is violated in a stationary way the dependence on time being explicitly given via a stationary process the standard example of which being the wiener process
