i can t tell you how refreshing it is in these polarised times to read a book on politics that doesn t have an axe to grind an essential read the sunday times jason cowley editor in chief of the new statesman examines contemporary england through a handful of the key news stories from recent times to reveal what they tell us about the state of the nation and to answer the question who are we now spanning the years since the election of tony blair s new labour government to the aftermath of the covid pandemic the book investigates how england has changed and how those changes have affected us cowley weaves together the seemingly disparate stories of the chinese cockle pickers who drowned in morecambe bay the east end imam who was tested during a summer of terror the pensioner who campaigned against the closure of her gp s surgery and gareth southgate s transformation of english football culture and in doing so cowley shows the common threads that unite them whether it is attitudes to class nation identity belonging immigration or religion he also examines the so called brexit murder in harlow the haunting repatriation of the fallen in the iraq and afghan wars through wootton bassett the lancashire woman who took on gordon brown and the flight of the bethnal green girls to islamic state fleshing out the headlines with the very human stories behind them through these vivid and often moving stories cowley offers a clear and compassionate analysis of how and why england became so divided and the united kingdom so fragmented and how we got to this cultural and political crossroads most importantly he also shows us the many ways in which there is genuine hope for the future

despite the mythology of sport bringing people together and encouraging everyone to work collectively to success modern sport remains a site of exclusionary practices that operate on a number of levels although sports participation is in some cases at least becoming more open and meritocratic at the management level it remains very homogenous dominated by western white middle aged able bodied men this has implications both for how sport develops and how it is experienced by different participant groups across all levels critical studies of sport have revealed that rather than being a passive mechanism and merely reflecting inequality sport via social agents interactions with sporting spaces is actively involved in producing reproducing sustaining and indeed resisting various manifestations of inequality the experiences of marginalised groups can act as a resource for explaining contemporary political struggles over what sport means how it should be played and by whom and its place within wider society central to this collection is the argument that the dynamics of cultural identities are contextually contingent influenced heavily by time and place and the extent to which they are embedded in the culture of their geographic location they also come to function differently within certain sites and institutions be it in one s everyday routine or leisure pursuits such as sport among the themes and issues explored by the contributors to this volume are social inclusion and exclusion in relation to class race and ethnicity gender and sexuality social identities and authenticity social policy deviance and fandom this book was published as a special issue of sport in society
